Chapter 185: The Lesser Divine – Seven Dragons

The Seven Dragons, the seven grandchildren of Sung Su-Ho, were destined to become pillars in the new era of the Sung Dynasty. Each of them carried the legacy of their divine lineage, inheriting the immense power and wisdom of their ancestors. Their creation as the Lesser Divine marked the continuation of the dynasty's influence across the realms, as they were granted the privilege of constructing their own castles beneath the towering fortresses of Inferna Draconis and Lunaris Citadel.

1. The Seven Dragons – A New Generation of Power

The Seven Dragons, as they came to be known, were the direct descendants of Sung Su-Ho, and each of them bore the bloodline of the Divine Triad. Together, they embodied the next generation of divine beings, each with their own unique strengths and roles to play in the multiverse.

1. Children of Sung Ye-Jun:

1. Sung Ha-Young (retired king) – The firstborn son of Sung Ye-Jun, Ha-Young had served as king with honor, and now, after his resignation, he became a guiding figure for the next generation. He carried the weight of centuries of history and ensured that the future of the dynasty remained secure.

2. Sung Jun-Ho – The second son of Sung Ye-Jun, Jun-Ho was a capable and calculating individual, known for his sharp intellect and strategic prowess. He possessed a deep understanding of governance and diplomacy, a skill he would use as he prepared to lead in his own right.

3. Sung Hyun-Joo (female) – The daughter of Sung Ye-Jun, Hyun-Joo was a fierce and compassionate leader. Her abilities as both a warrior and a diplomat were renowned, and her leadership was driven by a sense of justice and fairness that earned her the respect of all who knew her.

2. Children of Sung Ye-Rin:

4. Sung Ri-Hye (female) (retired princess royal) – The eldest daughter of Sung Ye-Rin, Ri-Hye had once served as the Princess Royal, but her retirement had marked a new chapter in her life. While no longer holding the title, she remained a powerful and influential figure within the Sung Dynasty, and her wisdom was sought after by all.

5. Sung Kyun-Rae – The second son of Sung Ye-Rin, Kyun-Rae was known for his unparalleled strength and charisma. His fierce loyalty to the Sung Dynasty and his powerful aura made him an unstoppable force in the realms, a figure whose reputation was known far and wide.

6. Sung Ji-Ae (female) – The youngest daughter of Sung Ye-Rin, Ji-Ae was a brilliant tactician with a deep connection to the mystical forces of the multiverse. Her power was subtle but immense, and she had the ability to manipulate reality itself with her intelligence and creativity.

7. Sung Da-Hyun – The youngest of the Seven Dragons, Da-Hyun was known for his boundless energy and enthusiasm. While still young, he demonstrated remarkable potential, his powers growing rapidly as he sought to prove his worth in the eyes of his family and the multiverse.

2. Building Their Own Castles

As the Lesser Divine, the Seven Dragons were granted permission to construct their own castles beneath the great fortresses of Inferna Draconis and Lunaris Citadel, two of the most powerful strongholds in existence. These castles were not merely homes but representations of their power, status, and connection to the divine lineage.

Underneath the looming shadows of the twin citadels, each dragon began to shape their own domain, infusing it with their unique abilities and personalities. These castles were to be both sanctuaries and fortresses, places where they could cultivate their influence and ensure that the Sung Dynasty would continue to thrive.

The construction of these castles was not a simple task. Each Seven Dragon was tasked with creating a structure worthy of their divine heritage, using the raw mana from the Second World Tree and the forces of the realms. These castles would serve as their central command posts, where they would oversee their dominions and exercise their will over the multiverse.

3. The Lesser Divine’s Role in the Multiverse

Though they were not yet as powerful as their parents, the Seven Dragons were no mere mortals. They were beings of immense power, with abilities far beyond those of most celestial entities. Their influence would be felt across the realms, and their castles would stand as monuments to their authority.

As they constructed their castles, the Seven Dragons also began to build their own armies, filling their ranks with loyal subjects and guardians. These soldiers would serve them faithfully, ensuring that the Sung Dynasty remained unchallenged in its dominance.

The Seven Dragons knew that their path would not be without challenges. They would have to prove themselves worthy of their divine heritage and the immense power that came with it. But with the guidance of their ancestors and the strength of their bloodline, they were more than prepared to face whatever came their way.

4. A New Legacy

The construction of the Seven Dragons' Castles marked the beginning of a new era. As they established their own realms beneath Inferna Draconis and Lunaris Citadel, the Lesser Divine prepared to expand their influence across the multiverse. Together, they would carry on the will of their ancestors, ensuring that the Sung Dynasty would continue to reign for eons to come.

The future of the Sung Dynasty was in good hands, for the Seven Dragons had the power, wisdom, and determination to lead the multiverse into a new age of prosperity and strength.
